

Narvik 1940: The Battle for Northern Norway Campaign - The Untold Story of a Crucial World War II Clash

In April 1940, the German Wehrmacht launched Operation Weserübung, an invasion of Denmark and Norway. The goal was to secure access to Norwegian ports and iron ore mines, which were vital to the German war effort. The Allies responded by sending a force of British, French, and Polish troops to Norway. The resulting campaign was a fierce and bloody struggle, with both sides suffering heavy losses.

One of the most important battles of the Norwegian Campaign was the Battle of Narvik. Narvik was a key port city in northern Norway, and its capture would have given the Germans control of the entire region. The Allies mounted a determined defense of Narvik, and after several weeks of fighting, they succeeded in repelling the German invaders.
