On April 30, 1980, six armed men stormed the Iranian embassy in London, taking 26 hostages. The hostage-takers were members of the Arab Separatist Group, a militant organization seeking the overthrow of the Iranian government. The siege lasted for six days, during which time the hostages were subjected to physical and psychological abuse. The British government refused to negotiate with the hostage-takers, and on May 5, the SAS launched a daring rescue mission that ended the siege and freed the hostages.
