In 1925, Lustig pulled off one of his most famous cons. He sold the Eiffel Tower to a scrap metal dealer for $500,000.

Lustig's scam was simple. He forged a letter from the French government, claiming that the Eiffel Tower was being sold for scrap. He then approached several scrap metal dealers, offering them the tower for a fraction of its actual value.

One of the dealers, Andre Poisson, fell for Lustig's scam. He paid Lustig $500,000 for the tower. Lustig then disappeared with the money.

Lustig's Eiffel Tower scam was just one of many. He also sold the Brooklyn Bridge, the Statue of Liberty, and the Panama Canal.

Lustig was eventually caught and imprisoned. He spent the rest of his life in jail, but he never stopped dreaming of new scams.

Victor Lustig was a master con man. He was able to deceive people from all walks of life, including some of the world's most powerful and wealthy people.

Lustig's story is a cautionary tale about the dangers of greed and credulity. It is also a fascinating look into the mind of one of the most successful criminals of all time.
